

ART GUIDE: FIAC PARIS 2018

As fashion month comes to a close, the art world is ready to saddle up for a season of frantic activity, beginning with last week's Frieze Art Fair in London and running all the way until Art Basel Miami in December. For the next two months, the world's prime gallerists, artists, and collectors will roam across the Earth in the search for the best showcases and sales – and this week, it's all about Paris, who hosts its annual FIAC art fair. While FIAC is one of the older fairs of the European continent, it's only in recent years it's really re-established itself as a leader in the industry, attracting a great variety of blue chip and emerging names from around the world. Its international importance has made the FIAC week the most important of the year for the city's museums and galleries, as proven by the wealth of exhibitions that can be experienced in the city. Should you be an uninitiated outsider – or frankly, just more concerned with the latest droppings on Vogue Runway, but still down for some painting-watching – despair not; here are four shows not to miss this week in the French Capital.

Mircea Cantor – “HISTORY IS JUST A BULLET ON YOUR TIMELINE” @ VNH Gallery

Back in the streets of Paris, the 3rd arrondissement offers a plethora of art watering holes – and VNH is always a safe bet. Founded by the fashionable Victoire de Pourtalès, previously a director at Thaddaeus Ropac, and collector H  l  ne Nguyen-Ban, VNH focuses on strong solo presentations by international artists, perfect for their spectacular location on Rue Vieille du Temple. Currently on display is a new exhibition by Mircea Cantor, the Romanian/French readymade artist.
